To Whom It May Concern,

Between 2010 to 2012 I worked with Jennifer in two capacities. Firstly, I was an onboarding instructor and mentor/colleague to her at Berlitz language school in Japan. Secondly, we collaborated on developing a seminar series for young adults in the international community in Tokyo and Kanto areas.

During my time working with Jennifer, she consistently showed outstanding professionalism, commitment to her students and quality of her work. A key area she excelled in was lesson preparation. Jennifer went above and beyond to clearly understand each student's individual goals, levels and develop material and lesson flow that was tailored to them.

Jennifer was proactive and took the lead in all group activities, in both training and planning settings. This natural attitude was clear from day one, and continued throughout her time here. She was well respected by fellow teachers, and consistently specifically requested by students.

We worked together in Japan, and she showed excellent cultural awareness. This allowed her to communicate and teach students in a manner which was familiar, understandable and comfortable. She also engaged in the local community, and therefore developed trust easily with students, parents and local colleagues.

Essentially, Jennifer clearly demonstrates that she A) genuinely cares about her student's progression and learning experience, and B) has a clear sense of pride in her development and career as an education professional. These two fundamental pillars allow her to work harder, with more creativity and patience than her peers.

During my time working in both public schooling and professional language education in Japan, I have worked with dozens of teachers from various backgrounds. Jennifer is a clear standout in terms of the quality of her work, commitment to ongoing professional development and ability to connect with her students. I would highly recommend her teaching positions in your organisation.
